PostgreSQL and pgvector

PostgreSQL is one of the most popular open-source relational databases. It supports extensions such as pg_trgm for fuzzy search and pgvector for vector embeddings. pgvector allows storing fixed-size vectors and performing fast nearest-neighbor search using cosine distance or L2. This makes PostgreSQL a solid foundation for semantic search and recommendation systems without needing an external vector database.